Young states: We live in a world where 'normal' does not truly exist except as an idea or concept. For each of us, where and how we grew up plays a foundational role in our sense of 'normal,' and only when we begin to experience the 'bigness and diversity' of the world are we tempted to evaluate our roots. I thought the way I grew up was 'normal,' but I think most would probably agree that my history and journey have been a bit unusual.
